This is only a partial list of important summer programs, most of which offer scholarships. American Bar Association website lists all the approved summer programs offered jointly by American Law Schools (go to <http://www.abanet.org/legaled/studyabroad/foreign.html> – but keep in mind that most American Law schools consider a summer school as another way of earning more, so don't apply until a good university is offering the course in an important city and their best faculty is teaching it!!)

Prefer summer courses that take place in The Hague, Strasbourg, Brussels, Geneva or London because these are the places where a lot of international organizations are located and a visit to their offices will certainly add to your summer experience abroad.

Generally the deadlines for most of the abovementioned courses are around February-March but since they start accepting applications much earlier (mostly December onwards) it's strongly recommended that you apply early because scholarship decisions are usually made in the beginning (Since you may be applying in the winter holidays don't forget to take 'letters of recommendations', attested transcripts and other documents that some summer schools require along with your application. For application requirements of each school refer to its website. If latest information is not available on the website, then don't hesitate to email the organizers of the summer course and ask for it). For those interested in applying to the LL.M. courses at the end of five years, an application to a summer school would give you an idea of how to prepare your application for the LL.M. courses and what documents to collect and other things.
